Introduction to archival research

From a researcher's perspective, the main difference between a library and the archives is that you can physically browse a library, but you can't browse the archives. Instead, an archivist brings you the materials that you request. This can sometimes make research challenging; fortunately, there are several helpful tools to help you plan your time. One important tool is the reference archivist (contact us at reference@glbthistory.org). Another is the collection catalog, which includes collection descriptions and finding aids.

Searching the catalog allows you to do the equivalent of scanning the library shelves for intriguing books. Some catalog records have more extensive descriptions in the form of a finding aid. A finding aid is an inventory of a collection. It's a document that contains an introduction to each collection, its basic statistics, and what may make it interesting. All of our collections that are open for research have catalog records and many have finding aids.

How to use the catalog

Our catalog is hosted on the Online Archive of California (OAC). The OAC is a listing of archival descriptions from all over the state. To search our collections, go to "Search Collections" on the GLBTHS website:

<https://www.glbthistory.org/catalog-search>

Type your inquiry into the top search box:

The screenshot shows a search interface for archival collections. At the top, there is a black and white photograph of several people's hands and arms resting on a surface. Below the photo, the text "SEARCH COLLECTIONS" is centered in blue. Underneath that, the word "Catalog Search" is in orange. A search bar is labeled "Search archival collections here:" followed by a text input field containing "Louis Sullivan" and a "Go" button. Below the search bar, there is another section labeled "Search periodicals and oral histories here:" with two checkboxes: "Periodical collections" and "Oral histories", both of which are checked. There is also a second, empty search input field and a second "Go" button.

If you hit "go," you'll be sent automatically to the OAC:

You have the option of narrowing down your search results by decade (in the box to the right). So if you are only interested in material from the 1940s, you could search by keyword, then limit by date.

You can also narrow results by subject, which is very useful in a more general search, like this one for “lesbian”:

How to find a finding aid

A “finding aid” is the term for a more detailed listing of a collection’s contents, like an inventory.

If a collection has a finding aid, it will be linked from the catalog record under “Additional collection guides”. You can see this in the Table of Contents to the right of the Collection Overview as shown below.

Description Louis Graydon Sullivan (1951-1991) was a gay and transgender activist who was notable as a community organizer, lay historian, and particularly as a diarist. Sullivan's papers include extensive diaries, short stories, poems, essays, correspondence, and photographs which intimately document his life and transition. The collection also contains his personal subject files and memorabilia.

Background Louis Graydon Sullivan (1951-1991) was a gay and transgender activist who was notable as a community organizer, lay historian, and particularly as a diarist. Sullivan's diaries chronicle his social and medical transition – as well as his rich emotional and sexual life – from his teenage years in Milwaukee until his death. Sullivan was born in Milwaukee, Wisconsin in 1951, the third of six children born to a close-knit Catholic family. He attended Catholic schools, where he was a good student, and loved to take on male roles in games, which he called 'playing boys.' As a teenager, his interest in masculinity coalesced into an aesthetic built around a romantic appreciation for rock stars (especially the Beatles) and tough, troubled young men. Sullivan struggled throughout his early life to understand himself and his gender, but his attraction to men was never in doubt; nor was his recognition of himself as queer. After graduating high school and beginning work as a secretary, he often wore men's clothing and became an active member of the Gay People's Union (GPU) of Milwaukee. In 1973, he had begun to identify of the major academic and scientific works on these topics through 1990, as well as several rare biographies of female-to-male cross-dressers. A few folders contain correspondence and other materials related to the published work. For a bibliography of published works contained in the Sullivan collection, see Appendix C. Series 3. Miscellaneous Gender-Related Material (1980-1990). Included in this series are flyers and other ephemera, transcripts of television talk shows featuring transgender people, testosterone package inserts, the Benjamin Standards of Care, a subject file pertaining to Les Nichols and Annie Sprinkle, the script for a movie about gender ambiguity for which Sullivan was a reader, and other difficult-to-classify materials. Series 4. Bibliographies and Indexes (1967-1986). Print-outs of exhaustive online bibliographic database subject searches on transgender-related topics through 1986. Sullivan also indexed many of these clippings and articles in his research files. Series 5. Audio Tapes (1988-1990). Recordings of radio programs on transgender identity and cross-dressing, interview with Lou Sullivan about his biography of Jack Garland, recordings of presentations at FTM Get-Togethers and ETVG meetings. For a list of tapes, see Appendix F. Series 6. Video Tapes (1935-1990). Most of the twenty videotapes in this series are recordings of television talk shows that treat the topics of transgender identity and cross-dressing. Some of the videotapes are theatrical motion pictures that treat the same topics, or in which female actors play male roles. For a list of titles, see Appendix G. Record Group 6: Computer-Readable Documents Series 1: Computer-Readable Documents. Currently unusable, due to an inability to locate the software in which they were written. Most of the disks merely contain back-up files for the Jack Bee Garland biography and for transcripts of Sullivan's diaries, but there is some evidence that the computer files also contain correspondence for which no hard copy exists.

Digital Collections

GLBTHS has several digitized collections, which you can look at here: <https://www.glbthistory.org/online-collections>

The collection titles and brief descriptions with links are listed. We highly recommend the Bay Area Reporter (BAR) archive as a first stop to many research queries. It is a completely digitized and searchable newspaper, and you can use it to learn about many businesses and figures. There is also a separate BAR site for obituaries. Both are linked from the digital collections page above.

Many of the collections consist of photographs. Some, like the papers of Bruce Decker and Beowulf Thorne, consist of manuscripts and papers. Most of the collections listed are not digitized in their entirety.

There are several collections that have been almost entirely digitized by Gale Cengage for their Archives of Sexuality and Gender database. The database can be viewed at some college campuses and public libraries, and also from the GLBTHS reading room. Even though the original materials are also available here, you may find the database to be an extremely powerful search tool. Again, see the Online Collections link above for a complete listing.

Finally, some of our material about transgender people is scanned and available on the Digital Transgender Archive: <https://www.digitaltransgenderarchive.net/inst/b91dbe86-4192-4c77-b1fc-d1c323b21c8b>

Watching video and listening to audio in the archives

In the archives, we have facilities for viewing VHS, DVD, audio cassette tapes, SD cards, and 3 ½-inch floppy disks. There is also a computer for viewing our digitized videos. If you want to view other formats, such as reel-to-reel film or Beta cassettes, you will have to have them digitized at your expense. This is also true of material on VHS or DVD that we haven't digitized yet. Please consult us, and we'll get you a price quote from our contractor so you can make an informed decision.
